

FRUSTRATION TOLERANCE ACTIVITY GUIDE

Simple activities to build your child's frustration tolerance at home.

Pick one calm-down activity and one challenge activity to try with your child this week.

Calm-Down Activities

- ☐ Deep breathing with counting — breathe in for four, out for four.
- ☐ Progressive muscle relaxation — tense and release each body part.
- ☐ Quiet sensory play — playdough, kinetic sand, or stress ball.
- ☐ Listening to calming music or nature sounds.
- ☐ Slow stretching or yoga poses.
- ☐ Wrapping up in a blanket or weighted item.
- ☐ Drawing or colouring feelings.

Challenge Activities

- ☐ Puzzles that are slightly too hard — celebrate the trying.
- ☐ Building with blocks and intentionally knocking them down.
- ☐ Obstacle courses with planned fails built in.
- ☐ Simple cooking or baking together where mistakes happen.
- ☐ Board games where losing is part of the lesson.
- ☐ Art projects where "mistakes" become the masterpiece.
- ☐ Timed challenges like stacking cups or races.

Parent Note:

Frustration tolerance is a skill, not a personality trait. These activities help your child practice sitting with discomfort and bouncing back.

Small frustrations now, big resilience later.
